Semantic Enrichment Methodology

- Source metadata is kept intact
- Collection-specific enrichment methodology by configuring the mapping rules from the original distinct metadata values to vocabulary terms
- Semantic enrichment per distinct metadata value of item types, subjects, temporal values, historic periods and persons
- Development of or own bilingual vocabularies or extensions or adaptations of existing popular vocabularies (ie UNESCO thesaurus)
- Linking to popular vocabularies and resources (ie AAT, Wikipedia, etc)
- Semi-automatic process, heavily curated but supported by self-learning smart tools

EKT LOD vocabularies

Cultural heritage item types

URI: http://semantics.gr/authorities/vocabularies/ekt-item-types

The vocabulary is hierarchical and bilingual and is linked to the Getty Art & Architecture Thesaurus (AAT) and the semantic thesaurus DBpedia of Wikipedia. The vocabulary is used for the homogenization and classification of the content aggregated by SearchCulture.gr, the National Aggregation Infrastructure for Cultural Heritage Content.

UNESCO Thesaurus (EKT version)

URI: http://semantics.gr/authorities/vocabularies/ekt-unesco

The vocabulary comprises the Greek version of the UNESCO Thesaurus terms. It is primarily destined for describing cultural resources, so it focuses on terms within the cultural, educational, social and humanities domain. It is continously updated and enriched with additional terms on its application.

Papadopoulos

Papadopoulos

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Papadopoulos (Greek: Παπαδόπουλος, IPA: [papaˈðopulos]; meaning "son of a priest") is the most common Greek surname. It is used in Greece, Cyprus and countries of the Greek diaspora as well, such as the USA, United Kingdom, Australia and Scandinavian countries. Its female version corresponds to the masculine genitive Papadopoulou (Παπαδοπούλου [papaðoˈpulu]).
